Preface

Ralph Prentice, circa 1840, Sturbridge, MA

The research behind the genealogy presented here was begun in 1993 in an attempt to document the family history given to me by Shanna Prentice, my grandmother. What began as an off hours hobby soon developed into a compelling passion that threatened to consume my every waking moment. The trail started in Holden, Worcester County, Massachusetts, where John Prentice, Sr. made his home in the early 1700s. His ancestry is unknown, and there are at present no viable theories regarding his parentage. From there, the trail led to nearby Sturbridge where his grandson, Ralph, lived for most of his adult life.

In the mid-1800s many members of the family moved to the midwest, where our immediately family lives today. Letters between Ralph's daughter, Julia, and her husband, John Clark, survive today, and are in the possession of Frank Hollingsworth, of Ft. Worth, Texas. These letters tell the story of a difficult and sometimes deadly trek from the civilized town of Sturbridge, Massachusetts to the wilds of Nebraska. At least two children were lost on the wagon train, stricken with what was probably diphtheria.

The trail does not end in Nebraska; it continues on to Texas, California, and Illinois. But my story ends here, with Julia and her husband.

Acknowledgements

I would like to extend my deepest thanks to Shanna Prentice, for her effort to put in writing the stories and traditions of the Prentice family. Her inspiration set me on a decade long journey.

Thanks also to Frank Hollingsworth for sending copies of the correspondence between Julia Prentice and her husband. I extend my gratitude to Sandra Collings, research librarian at the Holden Public Library, for her patience and understanding.
